

With the systems now integrated, students who have graduated from Orange County schools can transition to career and adult education with very little if any paperwork.

Orange County Public School District Winner of the Excellence Award for Strategic Vision 2014

Uniting 200,000 Students on One System

A successful strategic vision bridges the present and the future. It looks at current challenges and sees opportunities. It contains equal parts aspiration and inspiration. Imagine you're a public school system responsible for 200,000 students composed of pre-K students through adult learners in your community and you want to unite them all on one system.

In 2010, Florida's Orange County Public Schools undertook an ambitious effort to integrate disparate systems serving unique constituencies throughout the county as part of its stated goal of being a "top producer of successful students in the nation." The integration would bring together the district's pre-kindergarten to grade 12 student information system with Campus Management's system, the platform that serves career and technical education constituents. As large in scale as the integration would be (five CampusLinkSM Web Services integrations in total), it would also have to be cost-effective given state budget constraints. Today, as a result of its strategic vision and execution, the district has increased operational efficiency, improved workflows, and improved student outcomes.

Data updates across the school system are timely and reliable, better positioning the district to achieve its goals, and increasing its competitiveness in the current market. In addition to receiving the Strategic Vision Award for successful execution, the district is also a finalist for the 2014 Broad Prize for its record on student achievement.
